

PHOTOGRAPH HERO-01

HERO / COVER

Fighter mid-roundhouse on the pads, shot from low and slightly behind, hard rim light from a window or a single LED panel, gym dark behind. Underexpose the background by 2 stops.

APEX PREDATOR MMA FIGHT CLUB

TRAINING · SPARRING · FIGHT NIGHTS

WHERE LEGENDS ARE MADE.

A fight-wear brand built for the mixed martial arts subculture.

Product line: FIGHT CLUB — rashguards, shorts, tees, gloves.

PHOTOGRAPH STRIP-01

HAND WRAPS

Tight crop on hands being wrapped - the ritual before training. Side light, shallow depth of field.

PHOTOGRAPH STRIP-02

GLOVE DETAIL

Worn 4oz gloves resting on the cage or the mat edge. Show the scuffs; do not clean them up.

PHOTOGRAPH STRIP-03

MAT TEXTURE

Overhead of the tatami seams and chalk-dusted mat, feet just entering frame.

SUBCULTURE

MMA · MIXED MARTIAL ARTS

DESIGNER

@apexmma · ISSUE 01 / 2026

CONTENTS

This booklet presents APEX PREDATOR MMA — a fight-wear brand designed and marketed to the mixed martial arts subculture. It works through the research into the group, the meaning carried by their signs and symbols, the development of the design, and the plan for selling it to them.

01	Introduction / About the Brand	3
02	The Subculture — Definition	4
03	The Subculture — Demographics	5
04	Shared Interests, Activities & Values	6
05	Shared Lifestyle & Attitudes	7
06	Semiotics — Signs & Symbols	8
07	Semiotics — Meaning & Misreading	9
08	Mood Board	10
09	Ideation — Brainstorm, Mind Map & Thumbnails	11
10	The Product — Design System	12
11	Photography Plan & Contact Sheet	13
12	Marketability — Who Buys It	14
13	Marketing Plan — How We Reach Them	15
14	Conclusion / Call to Action	16

PHOTOGRAPH GYM-01

THE ROOM

Wide of the whole gym mid-class, bodies blurred by a slow shutter (1/30s) so the room reads busy and alive.

The room the whole brand is built around: a suburban MMA gym mid-session. Every photograph in this booklet is shot on location in a working gym rather than a studio.

APEX PREDATOR MMA is a fight-wear and training-gear brand built for one group of people: the mixed martial arts subculture. Its range is called FIGHT CLUB — rashguards, shorts, tees and gloves designed to be trained in rather than posed in.

The name does two jobs at once. An apex predator sits at the top of the food chain, which is exactly how a fighter is taught to think about a division. “Apex” is also the highest point of a climb — the peak you train towards.

The brand exists because fight gear sits in an awkward gap. Mainstream sportswear treats fighters as an afterthought: seams in the wrong place for grappling, sizing cut for runners, and graphics drawn by people who have never been tapped.

The specialist fight labels understand the sport but often look crude — skulls, flames, barbed wire, gothic type. APEX aims at the space between the two: real technical credibility with a design language a 22-year-old would actually wear on the street.

THE RANGE

INDICATIVE RRP

01 RASHGUARD

$79

Sublimated print, flatlock seams, four-way stretch. The core identity piece.

02 FIGHT SHORTS

$69

Split hem and silicone waist grip. Built to kick in without riding up.

03 TEE / HOODIE

$45 / $95

Heavyweight cotton. The off-mat, street-facing half of the brand.

04 40Z GLOVES

$89

Moulded foam, thumb lock. The entry purchase for a new member.

PHOTOGRAPH PROD-03

PRODUCT / KIT

Flat lay: gloves, wraps, mouthguard, shorts, rashguard, water bottle. Top-down, single soft source.

PHOTOGRAPH PROD-01

PRODUCT / RASHGUARD

The APEX rashguard worn and actually trained in - sweat-marked, on the mat, not on a hanger.

Left: the full FIGHT CLUB kit shot flat. Right: the rashguard photographed after a session rather than on a hanger — the subculture reads worn-in gear as proof the brand is actually used.

DEFINITION OF THE GROUP

Mixed martial arts is a full-contact combat sport that allows both striking and grappling, standing up and on the ground. It draws its techniques from boxing, Muay Thai, kickboxing, wrestling, Brazilian jiu-jitsu, judo and sambo, then tests them against each other inside a fenced cage.

The MMA subculture is the community that has grown around that sport, and it is far wider than the people who actually compete. Most members will never take a professional fight. It is made up of hobbyists who turn up four nights a week, amateur competitors, coaches and referees, and fans who will happily argue about a guard pass for an hour. What separates it from ordinary sports fandom is that membership is proven by participation — you are in it because you train, not because you bought a ticket. It should not be confused with gym or bodybuilding culture, which is organised around how a body looks rather than what it can do, nor with traditional martial arts, where forms and grading can matter more than live sparring.

WHAT MAKES IT DIFFERENT FROM THE WIDER CULTURE

- Consented violence — the wider culture is organised around avoiding physical confrontation. This one deliberately seeks it, under strict rules, and treats it as the most honest test of a person available.
- Earned status — no amount of money, followers or talk moves you up. A blue belt beats a beginner every time, and everyone in the room knows it.
- Public losing — a hobbyist is submitted by training partners several times a week. Elsewhere failure is hidden; here it is timetabled, witnessed and treated as information.
- Closeness with strangers — grappling needs a level of body contact the wider culture reserves for intimacy or medicine. On the mat it is completely unremarkable.
- Chosen hardship — weight cuts, 6am runs, ice baths, no alcohol during camp. Discomfort is not endured here, it is sought out on purpose.
- The body keeps the record — cauliflower ear, taped fingers, scar tissue. Members carry permanent, visible proof of belonging.

PHOTOGRAPH DEF-01

GRAPPLING

Two athletes in a clinch or a guard pass. Get low, fill the frame, keep both faces partly visible.

PHOTOGRAPH DEF-02

STRIKING

Pad work with sweat spray caught in the light. Fast shutter (1/500s) and a high ISO.

The two halves of the sport in one spread: grappling (left) and striking (right). Almost every visual signal the subculture uses comes out of one of these two worlds.

DEMOGRAPHICS OF THE GROUP

Who is actually in the room. The figures below are indicative estimates drawn from gym-level observation, promotion audience reporting and participation data rather than a formal survey, so they are given as ranges.

18-29

CORE TRAINING AGE

~75%

MALE PARTICIPATION

4-6

SESSIONS PER WEEK

40+

COUNTRIES WITH PRO CARDS

AGE

What age group are they mostly?

The training population is young. The core sits at 18–29, inside a broader active range of 16–34. Under-16s arrive through kids' and teens' programs, now a major part of most gyms' income, and masters divisions keep competitors going well past 35. Spectatorship skews a little older than participation, roughly 18–44, because watching costs far less time than training does. APEX targets 16–28: old enough to buy their own gear, young enough to still be building an identity around the gym.

NATIONALITY

Where are they from?

Global, with clear strongholds: the United States, Brazil, Russia and Dagestan, Japan, Thailand, Ireland, England, Poland, Mexico, Kazakhstan, and Australia and New Zealand. In Australia the sport is concentrated in the outer suburbs of Sydney, Melbourne, Brisbane and Perth, and Australian gyms punch well above their weight internationally. APEX is positioned as an Australian brand that still reads as globally credible.

GENDER

Is it mainly male, female, or mixed?

Still majority male — around three-quarters of gym membership and a similar share of the audience. But women's participation is the fastest-growing part of the sport, pushed along by athletes such as Ronda Rousey, Amanda Nunes, Zhang Weili and Alexa Grasso, and by women entering through self-defence and fitness classes rather than competition. Most fight labels still treat women's kit as a shrunken, pinker version of the men's. That is an obvious gap, and APEX is built to fill it.

CULTURAL IDENTITY

What backgrounds or influences do they have?

MMA is multicultural by construction: its techniques come from Brazil, Japan, Thailand, the United States and Russia, and the gym's vocabulary borrows with them — oss, mongkhon, kimura, sambo. Australian gyms are among the most mixed rooms you will find, with Pacific Islander, Maori, Lebanese, Vietnamese, Sudanese and Anglo-Australian athletes on one mat. Dagestani and wider Muslim influence has made prayer and fasting normal in elite camps, and the culture keeps deep working-class roots.

PHOTOGRAPH DEMO-01

THE CLASS

The whole class lined up at the end of session - deliberately show the mixed ages, genders and backgrounds in the room.

PHOTOGRAPH DEMO-02

WOMEN TRAIN

Female athlete drilling or sparring, framed exactly like the male athletes: as an athlete, never as decoration.

Shooting the class as it actually is — mixed ages, genders and backgrounds — does more marketing work than any slogan, because the target buyer recognises their own room.

INTERESTS, ACTIVITIES & VALUES

What the members of this subculture actually have in common — the things they do together, and the ideas they agree on. These are the hooks a brand can legitimately hang itself on.

HOBBIES & ACTIVITIES

- Training — four to six sessions a week across striking, grappling and strength, plus open mats at the weekend.
- Competing — amateur “smokers”, BJJ tournaments, Muay Thai interclubs and local fight cards.
- Watching together — UFC and ONE cards are social events, watched in groups at odd hours because of time zones.
- Analysis — breaking fights down frame by frame, technique channels, podcasts and coaches' breakdowns.
- Gear — comparing gloves, shin pads, rashguards and mouthguards is a hobby in its own right.
- Recovery — ice baths, saunas, physio, macro tracking and managing weight.

VALUES & BELIEFS

- Respect — touch gloves, shake hands, thank your partner, and protect them in sparring.
- Leave your ego at the door — being beaten is data, not humiliation.
- Discipline over motivation — turning up when you do not feel like it is the entire skill.
- Meritocracy — rank is demonstrated, never claimed. The mats settle it.
- Controlled aggression — violence has a place, a time and a rule set. Fighters are often the calmest people outside it.
- Loyalty and lineage — you represent a gym and a coach, and you say whose student you are.
- Self-mastery — the real opponent is your own comfort.

“LEAVE YOUR EGO AT THE DOOR.”

THE MOST REPEATED LINE IN ANY GYM

PHOTOGRAPH BELIEF-02

RESPECT

The glove touch or the bow at the start of a round - the gesture that turns violence into sport.

The glove touch: the gesture that converts a fight into a sport, and the single most useful image the brand has.

How belonging to this subculture actually shapes a week, a body and a set of opinions. This is the part a brand has to get right, because the audience can smell an outsider instantly.

LIFESTYLE & ATTITUDES

- Built around the timetable — meals, sleep and social life bend to the training schedule, not the other way around.
- Sacrifice is normal — diet, alcohol and late nights go first, and weight cuts before competition are brutal and accepted.
- Pain is reframed — soreness is expected, injuries become stories, and strapping tape is everyday equipment.
- Function over fashion on the mat — but strong loyalty to labels seen as legitimate, and instant contempt for the rest.
- Zero tolerance for fakes — poseurs, gym-only tough guys and McDojo black belts are the culture's favourite target. Authenticity is the highest currency there is.
- The gym as therapy — one of the most commonly stated reasons for training is managing stress, anger and anxiety.

A TRAINING WEEK — THE COMMITTED HOBBYIST

MON	TUE	WED	THU	FRI	SAT	SUN
RUN 6AM	S&C	MMA SPAR	RUN 6AM	BJJ · NO-GI	OPEN MAT	RECOVERY
MUAY THAI	BJJ · GI		MUAY THAI
■ STRIKING	■ GRAPPLING		■ STRENGTH / RUNNING		■ REST

PHOTOGRAPH BELIEF-01

THE COACH

Coach correcting a student's stance mid-round, hand on shoulder. Documentary, unposed.

Coaching mid-round. The relationship between coach and student is the emotional centre of the subculture, and the reason gym-level endorsement outperforms paid advertising.

The signifiers this subculture uses to recognise its own members, and what each one actually means to somebody inside the gym. Almost none of these meanings are decorative — they are claims about how much work a person has done.

DENOTATION

The literal meaning — what the thing plainly is, before any interpretation.

CONNOTATION

The implied meaning — what it represents to the group that uses it.

SIGNIFIER	DENOTATION — WHAT IT IS	CONNOTATION — WHAT IT MEANS TO THEM
THE OCTAGON / THE CAGE	An eight-sided competition area enclosed by chain-link fencing.	The ultimate proving ground. Nowhere to hide and no way out, so it reads as a complete test of a person — close to sacred ground.
4OZ OPEN-FINGER GLOVES	Minimal padding across the knuckles with the fingers left free.	The real thing. Free fingers mean grappling is allowed, so this is a whole fight rather than just boxing.
WRAPPED HANDS	Cotton or elastic wrap supporting the wrist and knuckles.	Ritual and preparation — the deliberate few minutes before violence. Reads as craft, not rage, which is why it is the most useful image the culture owns.
THE BJJ BELT	A coloured cloth belt, running white through to black.	Verified time served. A black belt is a decade of work, and it is the one credential here that cannot be bought, inherited or talked into existence.
CAULIFLOWER EAR	Scar tissue in the outer ear caused by repeated friction and impact.	Irrefutable proof of real mat mileage. Worn as a badge of honour, and often left untreated on purpose.
TEAM RASHGUARD & GYM PATCH	A compression top printed with a gym name, crest or sponsor marks.	Affiliation, exactly like a football jersey. It announces who you represent and whose student you are.
PREDATOR IMAGERY	Skulls, wolves, big cats, snakes and claw marks.	Killer instinct and dominance — sitting at the top of the food chain in your division. This is the signifier APEX PREDATOR MMA is built on.
BLACK + BLOOD RED	A near-black base carrying a single saturated red accent.	Black for discipline, seriousness and fight night. Red for blood, danger and adrenaline. Brushed silver for hardness and steel.
THE GLOVE TOUCH / BOW	A brief physical gesture exchanged before and after a round.	Mutual consent and respect. It is the signal that converts an assault into a sport, and both athletes know it.
KANJI, THAI & PORTUGUESE	Non-English words and characters on gear and gym walls.	Respect paid to where the techniques came from. Read as lineage and authenticity rather than decoration — but only if spelled correctly.

Every signifier on the previous page carries a second, unintended reading for people outside the subculture. This matters commercially as well as ethically: the same image that earns respect on the mat can lose a stockist, a sponsor or a parent's permission outside it.

SIGNIFIER	READ INSIDE THE SUBCULTURE	MISREAD BY EVERYONE ELSE
THE CAGE	A safety structure that stops fighters falling out of the ring, and the sport's proving ground.	"Human cockfighting" — the phrase a US senator used against the sport in the 1990s. Animals in a pen; barbarism.
CAULIFLOWER EAR	A credential. Evidence of years of honest work on the mat.	Disfigurement, or proof that somebody is a thug. Often the first thing a non-training parent notices.
PREDATOR & SKULL IMAGERY	Competitive mindset and dominance within a weight division.	Glorifying real violence — and in some contexts read as gang or extremist coding.
THE NAME "FIGHT CLUB"	The ordinary, everyday word for a training group at a gym.	The Fincher film: illegal, unsupervised, bare-knuckle fighting.
THE NAME "APEX PREDATOR"	Top of the food chain, competitively — the athlete nobody can solve.	"Predatory", which is a genuinely unhelpful word to have circling a brand aimed partly at teenagers.
BLACK + RED, TATTOOS, SHAVED HEADS	The standard, unremarkable aesthetic of fight culture.	Intimidating; occasionally confused with football-hooligan or far-right visual coding.
WOMEN TRAINING	Athletes doing exactly what the men in the room are doing.	Easily read as sexualised if it is shot using the conventions of fashion rather than those of sport.

WHAT THIS MEANS FOR THE DESIGN

- Keep the octagon, lose the blood — the cage is used as geometry, a crest and a frame, never as a picture of somebody being hurt.
- No skulls — the predator idea is carried by the claw slash and the word APEX alone.
- Photograph the discipline, not the damage — wraps, coaching, the empty gym at 6am. Effort reads as aspirational to insiders and outsiders alike.
- Frame FIGHT CLUB as sport every time — it never appears without TRAINING · SPARRING · FIGHT NIGHTS beneath it, so the underground-fighting reading never lands.
- Shoot women exactly like men — same lenses, same angles, same sweat, same crops.
- Get the technique right — a wrong guard or a bad stance in an advert is mocked instantly, and the credibility does not come back.

THE TEST APPLIED TO EVERY SYMBOL IN THIS BRAND

If it only works inside the gym it is a liability.
 If it only works outside, it is invisible.

The visual territory the brand is aiming at: low light, hard rim light, worn equipment, steel and chalk, and effort rather than injury. Assembled before any layout work began.

THE RESULT · COVER ARTWORK

PHOTOGRAPH MOOD-03
MOOD / STILL

A fighter sitting alone on the mat between rounds, head down, breathing. The quiet side of the sport.

PHOTOGRAPH MOOD-01
MOOD / SWEAT

High-contrast black and white of a fighter's back and shoulders, sweat catching the light.

PHOTOGRAPH MOOD-02
MOOD / NIGHT

Arena or gym lights flaring in the dark - atmosphere, no subject.

PHOTOGRAPH SEMIO-01
THE BELT

Close crop on a worn BJJ belt being tied, frayed and faded. The wear is the whole point.

PHOTOGRAPH SEMIO-02
THE CAGE

Cage mesh close-up with a fighter soft-focused behind it. Shoot through the fence, do not shoot the fence.

MOOD PALETTE

NIGHT

STEEL

OLD BLOOD

FIGHT NIGHT

ADRENALINE

CHALK

Left: atmosphere reference. Right: the palette pulled straight out of the photographs rather than chosen first.

IDEATION & DEVELOPMENT

Turning the research into something that can be drawn. The mind map converts each researched signifier into a usable design device; the thumbnails test how those devices sit on a page.

MIND MAP – FROM RESEARCH TO DESIGN DEVICE

THUMBNAIL SKETCHES

BRAINSTORM

APEX cage OCTAGON wraps CLAW lineage SWEAT oss PREDATOR blood red tap
DISCIPLINE mat time HONOR steel cauliflower WARRIOR 6am

THE DESIGN SYSTEM

The finished kit of parts, and the research reason behind each decision. Every element here traces back to a signifier identified in sections 06 and 07.

LOGO / LOCKUP

- The crest — a true eight-sided octagon, taken straight from the cage. It is the one shape the subculture cannot mistake for anything else.
- The claw — three slashes, the centre one longest. Carries the predator idea without resorting to a skull.
- The split — APEX PREDATOR in silver, MMA in red, so the sport is always the loudest word in the lockup.

COLOUR PALETTE

TYPEFACES

ANTON

DISPLAY · HEADLINES · THE LOCKUP

Heavy, condensed and unapologetic. It behaves like stencilled arena signage, and it holds up at poster scale.

Barlow Condensed

LABELS · SMALL CAPS · CAPTIONS

Narrow enough to set the long technical strings the sport is full of without shouting over the display face.

APPLICATIONS

Every application is built from the same three parts: the crest, the split wordmark, and exactly one red accent.

PHOTOGRAPHY PLAN

Photography is a required element of this product, and it is also the single biggest credibility test the brand faces. Every frame is shot on location in a working gym, using people who actually train.

HOW THESE ARE SHOT

- Available light first — one window or a single LED panel, with the background deliberately underexposed so the subject is rim-lit rather than evenly lit.
- Fast glass, high ISO — 1/500s and above to freeze strikes; 1/30s deliberately for the wide room shots so movement smears and the gym reads as busy.
- Documentary, not directed — nothing is staged twice. Sweat, tape and scuffed gear stay in frame because removing them removes the proof.
- Consent and safety — written permission from the gym and from every athlete, and nobody is photographed mid-injury.

CONTACT SHEET – ALL 20 FRAMES

TO SHOOT	TO SHOOT	TO SHOOT	TO SHOOT	TO SHOOT
01 HERO-01	02 STRIP-01	03 STRIP-02	04 STRIP-03	05 GYM-01
TO SHOOT	TO SHOOT	TO SHOOT	TO SHOOT	TO SHOOT
06 DEF-01	07 DEF-02	08 DEMO-01	09 DEMO-02	10 BELIEF-01
TO SHOOT	TO SHOOT	TO SHOOT	TO SHOOT	TO SHOOT
11 BELIEF-02	12 SEMIO-01	13 SEMIO-02	14 MOOD-01	15 MOOD-02
TO SHOOT	TO SHOOT	TO SHOOT	TO SHOOT	TO SHOOT
16 MOOD-03	17 PROD-01	18 PROD-02	19 PROD-03	20 MARKET-01

WHO WOULD BUY THIS

Being specific about the target audience matters more here than in almost any other market, because this subculture actively polices who is allowed to claim membership. The three buyers below are ranked by how much credibility they carry, not by how much they spend.

PRIMARY TARGET

TYSON 19
THE COMMITTED HOBBYIST
TRAINS

5 nights a week, 18 months in

LEVEL

one amateur Muay Thai bout

BUYS

2–3 rashguards a year, shorts, mouthguards

SPEND

$250–400 a year

Wants gear that says he is serious rather than brand new. He is the buyer whose approval everyone else copies.

HIGHEST VALUE

AISHA 23
THE COMPETITOR
TRAINS

6 sessions a week plus S&C

LEVEL

BJJ blue belt, competes quarterly

BUYS

competition-legal kit, walkout wear

SPEND

$400–700 a year

Judges fit and performance before anything else. A brand that finally cuts properly for women earns loyalty that is very hard to shift.

HIGHEST VOLUME

JACK 17
THE FAN AT THE EDGE
TRAINS

once or twice a week

LEVEL

no competition, watches every card

BUYS

tees and hoodies only

SPEND

$80–150 a year

Buys the look and the belonging. Essential for volume, but must never be served at the expense of the two buyers above.

TWO MORE THINGS THE PLAN DEPENDS ON

- Gyms are the real customer — a single team-kit order for one gym outsells dozens of individual sales, and it puts the logo on a whole room at once. This is the biggest revenue lever the brand has.
- Who we are deliberately not chasing — general activewear buyers, and anyone drawn to street-fighting imagery. Serving either one would cost the credibility that everything else here depends on.

PHOTOGRAPH MARKET-01
THE WALKOUT

Fighter walking out under the lights with the brand visible on the kit - the moment the logo gets broadcast.

The walkout: a sponsored amateur wearing the kit under the lights. This is the single highest-value placement the brand can buy, and it costs almost nothing.

HOW WE REACH THEM

This audience does not respond to conventional advertising, and it is unusually good at spotting a brand run by people who do not train. The plan therefore spends most of its effort inside gyms and at events, and treats social media as documentation rather than promotion.

CHANNELS

01

INSTAGRAM & TIKTOK

Short technique clips, sparring rounds, gear checks and fight-camp footage. Athlete-shot and vertical, never studio-polished. Posted daily.

02

ATHLETE & GYM SEEDING

Free kit to local amateurs and coaches in exchange for walkout and training wear. Cheap, and it buys the one thing money normally cannot: insider endorsement.

03

EVENTS & INTERCLUBS

A merch booth and cage banner at local fight nights, BJJ comps and Muay Thai interclubs. Sponsor one card per quarter.

04

GYM STOCKISTS

Wholesale racks inside partner gyms plus bulk team-kit deals, so the brand is bought at the exact place identity is formed.

05

ONLINE STORE

Shopify, with an honest fit guide by discipline, and limited drops to create the scarcity this audience already responds to.

06

LONG-FORM & COMMUNITY

YouTube breakdowns, podcast sponsorship, and a genuine presence in the sport's forums and Discords rather than paid comments.

BUDGET SPLIT – YEAR ONE

THE THREE RULES

- Use real athletes from real gyms — a model who has never trained is spotted in one frame.
- Never fake credentials — no invented lineage, no borrowed belts, no stolen fight records.
- Support before selling — sponsor the local card, pay the photographer, kit out the coach.

14

SECTION

CONCLUSION

APEX PREDATOR MMA takes a subculture that is built on proof rather than talk, and answers it with a brand that can survive being looked at closely.

WHAT THE RESEARCH FOUND

A community organised around earned status, chosen hardship and a total intolerance of anything fake.

WHAT THE SYMBOLS MEAN

The octagon, the wraps, the belt and the worn-in gear all say the same thing: this person has done the work.

WHAT THE DESIGN DOES

Uses those signs as geometry and restraint rather than as gore, so it reads as credible inside the gym and safe outside it.

WARRIOR
SPIRIT*JOIN THE ELITE | APEX FIGHT CLUB

TRAINING · SPARRING · FIGHT NIGHTS

WWW.APEXMMA.COM

@APEXMMA · #UNLEASHTHEBEAST